Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: .the quantity as the chicks increase in size and appetite, and about the time the chicks are six weeks old we reduce the ration to four feeds a day; the last feed at night is then wheat or cracked corn. By the time the chicks are six weeks old they can manage dry grain, and they like that for the last feed at night. We continue the bread crumbs and oat-meal feeds for three or four months, and feed four times a day until the chicks are probably four months old; then reduce it to three times a day, taking pains of course to feed a larger amount at each time. The greater the number of feeds, as a rule, the smaller the proportion should be, so that an excess shall not be fed. That is a point to be carefully guarded against. We continue oat-meal until they are four months old, and then substitute a morning mash, which we feed to our laying stock all through the year; that mash I will describe when I come to the part of my story which applies to the laying stock. After the chicks are four months old, the three feeds which we reduce to are a mash in the morning, barley or wheat at noon, and cracked corn at night, gradually extending into whole corn as the chicks grow larger. And we vary those feeds. For instance, if we give cracked wheat at noon, perhaps cracked corn...
